SIX VILLAGES HIT IN WARNING TO LEBANON

'Political, not military move'

By HIRSH GOODMAN, Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent
Israel on Friday night attacked six villages in southern Lebanon in what Defence Minister Moshe Dayan said yesterday was a clear warning that there will be no peace for the inhabitants of the entire South Lebanon region unless Israeli settlers in the northern Galilee are allowed to live in peace.

Speaking in Tel Aviv yesterday, Mr. Dayan said Friday night's attack, in which over 20 houses and a regional water works were blown up, was not a military but a political action.

According to an announcement by the army spokesman, all Israeli soldiers who took part in the action returned safely to base.

Israel took captive ten suspected collaborators and one Lebanese gendarme who was found in the area.

Mr. Dayan said yesterday that if the Lebanese are found to be not guilty of collaboration they would most probably be returned in the near future.

The object of the attack Friday was not to seek revenge for the slaughter of 16 civilians by three terrorists in the northern Galilee town of Kiryat Shmona on Thursday, Mr. Dayan said, but to prod the Lebanese government into taking action against the terrorists on its territory.

Mr. Dayan said he was convinced the Lebanese government was capable of executing.

Should the Lebanese government remain inactive, he warned, the entire southern part of Lebanon would be in danger of becoming like the villages in the Jordan Valley at the height of terrorist activity from over the Jordanian border at the turn of the decade, when an estimated 70,000 Jordanian farmers were forced to leave the area.

"We are not the Lebanese police," he said. "There is no reason for us to seek out and destroy terrorist leaders or their bases in Lebanon. The Lebanese know where they are, and if they intend to live in peace then they had better act."

Israel's raid on Friday night did not come as a surprise. Action had been expected since Thursday when three terrorists from Ahmed al-Libnani's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command (PFLP-GC) had been killed in Kiryat Shmona.

Israel's tactics, however, were not expected, observers here anticipated a reaction similar to the bombing of terrorist concentrations and bases in Syria and Lebanon after the Munich massacre in September 1972.

SIX POINTS
Israeli forces crossed the border at six points on Friday night and made their way by foot towards six villages several kilometers distant from the border: Duhail, Yafin, Eitarun, Blida, Muhabib and Talbeh in the north. It was from the last village that the three terrorists are thought to have set out Friday night, before crossing the border into Israel and attacking the two apartment houses in Kiryat Shmona.

At each village troops pinpointed houses of suspected collaborators, cleared them of their occupants and razed them to the ground. Only in Talbeh — where the orders were general punitive action — an entire block of 10 houses was destroyed, as was a water pumping station housing three generators and three pumps which irrigated the region from waters of the Litani River.

According to acting Chief of Staff Aluf Yitzhak Harel, the entire operation which lasted until 2 a.m., and in which a single Lebanese soldier was encountered, was a clear warning to the Lebanese military personnel after Thursday's incident, apparently in anticipation of an Israeli raid and Lebanese unwillingness to provoke a clash. Israeli soldiers, Aluf Harel said, were under strict orders not to harm civilians but Defence Minister Dayan allowed yesterday that "an accident could have occurred."

The Lebanese claim a woman and child were killed in the attack.

Friday night's action may not be the last along the frontier, Mr. Dayan made it clear that should the terrorists strike again from Lebanese territory Israel would react. He also made it clear that Israel would not limit its actions to attacks against Lebanese villages, and would hit terrorists and terrorist bases when the opportunity presented itself.

'Israel shells two villages'
SIDON, Lebanon (AP). — Israeli gunners pounded two villages in southern Lebanon last night, causing undisclosed damage to houses and plantations, villagers reported.

The shelling occurred moments after two rockets were fired into Israeli-held territory across the border from a suburb of Mens al-Jabal town, according to a report reaching here.

The intermittent Israeli shelling reportedly lasted 45 minutes. No casualties were reported.

Meets Syrian delegation

Dr. K. to go ahead with Mideast visit

By IRA SILVERMAN, Jerusalem Post Correspondent
WASHINGTON. — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, after meeting with the visiting Syrian delegation on the issue of a Golan Heights disengagement, called the talks very useful and said he is still planning to go to the Middle East later this month.

Sources close to the Secretary say he will leave for the area about April 24 and probably visit Damascus before going on to Jerusalem following Independence Day celebrations on the 25th.

Kissinger's commitment to conduct another shuttle diplomacy tour is interpreted here as reflecting some satisfaction, in light of his meeting with the Syrians, that progress can be made toward narrowing the differences between the Israeli and Syrian disengagement proposals. It also indicates his belief that negotiations on disengagement remain possible even after the resignation of Prime Minister Golda Meir's government.

Kissinger and the Syrian delegation, led by Brigadier General Hikmat Shihabi, met Friday evening for a working dinner and again yesterday morning for almost two hours. Following yesterday's meeting the Secretary said that in his extensive talks with the Syrians "I presented the ideas that were brought here by General Dayan and received some details on Syria's ideas. I consider the talks to have been very useful, conducted in a very friendly and constructive atmosphere."

He added that "the U.S. will continue its efforts to bring the two sides together and I continue to believe that disengagement is the primary objective in the Middle East right now. The talks we have had here this weekend have furthered this effort."

General Shihabi, speaking through an interpreter, said he agreed with what the Secretary had stated insofar as their discussions were concerned and expressed "great appreciation for his efforts to bring about a durable and just peace in the area."

NO SIGNIFICANCE
Subsequently questioned by newsmen about the Syrians' omission of disengagement specifically, Kissinger said it had no significance and that Syria is prepared to work toward disengagement as the next step. He also said that any disengagement accord is reached, Syria would be willing to participate in Geneva talks on an overall Arab-Israeli peace settlement.

Dr. Kissinger told reporters that he had received from General Shihabi's delegation more details of the Syrian disengagement proposals than he had got during his last visit to Damascus, but he would not elaborate. He indicated that the discussion was complete with maps and detailed plans.

The Secretary was expected to meet with General Shihabi once again, probably late last night, before going to the U.N. Kissinger was also due to meet yesterday with Egyptian Foreign Minister Imad Fahmy. The two men had breakfast together on Friday.

The Israeli Embassy reported that Ambassador Simcha Diniz was to confer with the Secretary, probably by telephone, late last night or early today to review the week's busy round of talks. Dr. Kissinger met on Thursday with Algerian President Houari Boumedienne and on Friday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, and both meetings included discussion of the disengagement issue. When Mr. Gromyko was asked about the Middle East following his lunch with the Secretary, the Russian told newsmen that the matter was "complicated, very complicated."

The collapse of the Israeli Government was one factor which seriously complicated the picture during the week. Dr. Kissinger has tried, both in his own remarks and through the State Department spokesman, to create the impression that the momentum of American diplomatic efforts toward a disengagement will be maintained. Department sources indicated, however, that Kissinger is "anxious" about the Israeli domestic political crisis and will have to assess its impact before deciding how to proceed with his next shuttle diplomatic effort.

These sources, obviously worried about the political situation in Israel, appear to believe that the Israeli caretaker government will be able to negotiate a limited disengagement agreement with Syria. However, they think that little can be accomplished toward permanent settlements with Egypt and Jordan until a new Israeli Government is formed.

Assad on Soviet tour after signing accords in Moscow

By MARK SEGAL, Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
DAMASCUS, Syria (AP). — President Hafez Assad of Syria arrived in Moscow yesterday for a top-level summit with Soviet leaders, two days after signing a long-term agreement on future economic and technical cooperation, a protocol on this year's trade turnover and a plan for cultural and scientific cooperation for 1974-1975.

The deputy head of Syria's ruling Arab Ba'ath Socialist party, Abdulla Hamud, also signed an agreement on future ties with the Soviet Communist party.

Assad is next due to visit Tashkent, capital of the predominantly Moslem cotton-growing republic of Soviet Uzbekistan. Assad himself belongs to Syria's Alawi sect although the majority of Syrians are Sunni Moslems.

The first two days of his official visit to the Soviet Union were marked by implicit but stern warnings from Kremlin chiefs against trusting the United States to negotiate a peace.

Assad responded to the warnings by declaring at a luncheon on Friday that his government was in complete agreement with the Soviet Union on the main points at issue in the Middle East.

And at the same time he pledged to strengthen cooperation with Moscow and thanked the Soviet Union for its arms supplies to Syria.

The Kremlin is apparently hoping to compensate for the decline in its influence in Egypt with a matching consolidation of its relations with Syria.

This weekend a Syrian delegation was in Washington for talks with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on possible steps to bring about a troop disengagement with Israel, but observers said the Moscow mood probably ruled out any major development.

The Soviet Union is believed to be angry at its exclusion from earlier negotiations when Dr. Kissinger helped to arrange a troop pull-back in the Israeli-Egyptian front at the end of last year, and from his subsequent efforts to persuade Syria to follow suit.

Assad is due to return to Damascus at the start of next week.

Another Likud leader, Free Centre chairman Shmuel Tamir, urged yesterday that new elections be held immediately, and warned: "If the existing coalition parties try to block the way to the emergence of new political forces then the unrest we have experienced so far will be nothing compared with the disruptions we can expect."

The attitude of the National Religious Party to be spelled out to the President by its delegation is that a national emergency wall-to-wall government should be formed by a Labour Knesset member. Party sources said last night that although the NRP Youth Circle Knesset Members, Zevulun Hammer and Yehuda Ben-Meir, wanted new elections, the veteran leadership wished to avoid a poll if it was feasible.

The Independent Liberals would also like to avoid new elections, which explains the weekend call by ILP Knesset Whip Yehuda Shaari on the Civil Rights Movement and Prof. Amnon Rubinstein's "Change" group to join forces with his party.

A different view is being taken by ILP Knesset Member Hillel Seidel, who has urged the formation of a National Coalition. He said that such a coalition should stay in office at least until new elections were held, and that these should be based on a new electoral system.

Information Minister Shimon Peres urged in an interview reported in "Maariv" on Friday that a new coalition should be formed without first calling elections.

Mr. Peres said that Moshe Dayan had the qualifications to be Prime Minister "but I don't know whether he has any chance."

Mr. Peres reiterated the adherence of his ex-Rafi group to the Labour Party. "We are not candidates for any realignment of political forces."

He criticized ex-generals — now Cabinet colleagues — Rabbia Yaniv and Bar-Lev for attending the party's Elgar Circle closed meeting at which a call was made for the removal of the established leadership.

Labour debating next move

Will today ask President for more time

By MARK SEGAL, Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
JERUSALEM. — The Labour Party is debating its next move today, after President Katsir today gave the party a deadline to decide on its next move following the resignation of Premier Golda Meir last week.

Party sources said that time was needed to decide on who would succeed Meir as Prime Minister. They said possibly lead to a showdown with the party, with the possibility of a split.

Proposals being considered include the possibility of an election being made to persuade Meir to stay on as Premier. The caretaker Government until elections were held, possibly Rosh Hashana, in September, is not clear last night whether the Labour Party Central Committee will in fact be convened this week, as was envisaged Friday night. Under the Party's constitution the C.C. members have the right to make the party's decision on leadership.

Under the Party's constitution the C.C. members have the right to make the party's decision on leadership.

A similar call for new elections came yesterday from the Elgar (Challenge) ideological circle headed by Herzliya Mayor Yosef Nevo, whose members include Transport Minister Aharon Yariv.

The Likud is likely to propose to the President that it be given the chance to form a National Unity Government — even if it is a caretaker administration based on minority support in the Knesset — until new elections are held.

Mr. Yigal Hurwitz, of the Likud's State List, in an appeal to ex-Rafi members of the Alignment over the weekend, said: "The Likud now has the moral authority to form a coalition, and the key is in the hands of Rafi, which has reached the end of its path in the Labour Party."

The ex-Rafi reaction to this call was: "Yigal Hurwitz is entitled to his opinion."

Sapir blames Dayan for Golda's step

Jerusalem Post Reporter
Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir yesterday said Moshe Dayan's resignation was a "step" in the wrong direction, and that the Agranat report had contributed in no small measure to Prime Minister Golda Meir's decision to resign.

Speaking in an interview on the radio's "Weekly News Magazine," Mr. Sapir reiterated once more that he was not a candidate to succeed Mrs. Meir, although his name was being mentioned prominently.

Sapir also blamed Mrs. Meir's own colleagues in the Labour Party's Mapai wing for her resignation. He said some of the statements they made last week "were the last drops that filled her cup." This was an obvious reference to the strong criticism of the Government's low prestige, voiced by Agriculture Minister Haim Gvati and Police Minister Shlomo Hillel at a Mapai leadership caucus.

Sapir said he failed to understand how Dayan could have remained silent after ex-Chief of Staff David Elazar read out his letter of protest and resignation at the Cabinet session which discussed the findings of the Agranat Commission.

Recalling that he had opposed Dayan's ouster before the Commission had published its interim report, Sapir said the vast majority of the Labour Party and of Mapai, including himself, now think that Dayan must resign. Ahudut Ha'avoda even threatened to pull out its two Ministers — Yigal Alon and Yisrael Galili — from the Cabinet, should Dayan remain in the Defence Ministry.

"A resignation is not an ouster," Sapir said, recalling that he had offered Dayan the Treasury, with the option to appoint a Deputy Finance Minister (Gad Ya'acobi).

He said Dayan had erred in his interpretation of the Agranat report, and that he was also wrong in basing his refusal to resign on Justice Minister Haim Zadok's legal opinion regarding ministerial responsibility in Israel.

Despite his harsh criticism of Dayan, Sapir expressed hope that the present rift in the Labour Party would not develop into a split. He said Dayan's statement last week that Mrs. Meir's resignation would lead to new political groupings could be interpreted in various ways. It did not necessarily mean that Rafi would cross the aisle and join the Likud right-wing opposition.

Sapir recalled that Dayan had often said he was an integral part of the labour movement, "having been born in Degania and raised in Nahalal." Sapir did not think the Rafi members in the kibbutz and moshav settlements would be prepared to team up with Likud.

The Labour Party's curse must come from within, otherwise, it will lose its hegemony in the Government, Sapir said, adding that Labour hegemony did not stand for Cabinet seats and power, but for a certain ideology. "Now that Golda has resigned and a whole generation of the old-timers will no longer be in the leadership, people will hark back to her times."

Sapir said new elections would not change very much, since the country had gone to the polls only three months ago, but he would not oppose a decision to hold another vote. But elections should not be held before the Agranat Commission had completed its entire report: "We don't need shocks in instalments."

Elections should definitely not be held until after August 3, when the new voters' registry will be published — the registry will include close to 100,000 new voters, he said.

Stressing that he had not changed his mind, Sapir said he himself was not on his list of candidates for the Premiership. In his view the next Prime Minister should be a "human person," with the ability to influence people, "although I don't know what 'charisma' means."

Two soldier victims buried

Jerusalem Post Staff
The two soldiers who fell in the Kiryat Shmona terrorist attack were buried in separate funerals on Friday.

Rav-Turail Suhel Abzak, 20, was buried with military honours in the Circassian village of Rehaniya, eight kms. north of Safad.

The body was first taken from the Government Hospital there to the Mosque of Tarshia, the soldier's birthplace, where the villagers filed past his coffin. A large number of mourners of the Circassian, Jewish and Arab communities attended the funeral.

Suhel's father, a sergeant on the local police force, was on duty at the Meona station on Thursday afternoon, while most of the members of the force were attending the funeral of a colleague in Nahariya. Army representatives who came to inform the Abzak family of Suhel's death went to the police station to inquire where the family lives, and thus informed the father of his son's death without realizing to whom they were speaking.

Suhel's father said at the funeral he was proud to have brought up his son in a spirit of loyalty to the State and to intrepidity in the moment of danger. "I regard him as still alive, because he fulfilled a double duty — that of service to the State and that of saving his fellow men." At the father's request no salute was fired over the grave.

Rav-Turail Suhel Abzak was among the soldiers who retook Mt. Hermon from the Syrians in the Yom Kippur War. He is the first of the Circassian community, whose sons have been drafted for service in the army since 1966, to fall in the line of duty.

The funeral of Segen-Mishne Mordechai Geridi, 20, of Ramat Hasharon, the other soldier killed in the massacre, took place Friday morning at the military cemetery in Kiryat Shaul.

Geridi's mother, who has been confined to a wheel chair for several years, refused to leave the open grave, while his younger brother faints and his father could not manage to recite the kaddish. The funeral was attended by the chaplain of the Central Command, Sgan-Aluf Avraham Avidan, and by teachers and students of the Kiryat Noah Yeshiva of Jerusalem, from which Mordechai graduated before beginning his army service.

Lebanese villagers demand protection

By ANAN SAFADI
Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
The Beirut authorities said yesterday the Israeli raid on six Lebanese villages resulted in the death of a woman and her daughter, the abduction of 13 men and the demolition of 24 houses.

The official Lebanese communiqué said between midnight and 1 a.m. Saturday morning Israeli units infiltrated into the villages of Duheira, Yarin, Muhabeib, Bida, Talbeh and Elitaroun near the border. The women of Yarin were named as Alya Ali Jaber, 60, and her 15-year-old daughter Amneh. They were reportedly killed in the wreckage of a Muhabeib house where Israeli troops held two men in custody. These were named as Aley Zaker, 35, and his brother Ahmed, 18.

The detainees were said to have been among 13 villagers picked up during the raid. Relatives identified four others as Abdul-Majid Farhat, his brother Aly Farhat, and the latter's son Ezat of Bida, and Ismail Yusuf Hussein of Elitaroun. They reported that Israeli troops said the prisoners would not be released unless Lebanon freed the two Israeli pilots who bailed out from their Phantom jet in southern Lebanon last Monday after a military action against the Syrians on the Golan front.

Villagers said there was no fighting between the Israeli troops and the Lebanese army in the area. Both the Lebanese security forces and the terrorists appear to have withdrawn amid fears of an imminent Israeli strike in retaliation for the attack on Kiryat Shmona last Thursday.

But the villagers said they were taken completely by surprise. Many reported they were confronted with Israeli troops right on their doorsteps ordering them to evacuate their houses.

Most of the Lebanese in the area are tobacco farmers. Residents of Duheira and Yarin said the Israeli troops must have come to their villages on foot crossing their rolling green fields along the border. Villagers from Bida, Talbeh, Muhabeib and Elitaroun, however, said that the Israelis arrived in groups of 100 to 200 soldiers in tracked vehicles.

Indications yesterday were that the government of Premier Solh was heading towards a political crisis in which the terrorist presence in Lebanon may be a focal issue. Lebanon may follow Jordan's lead in seeking "disengagement" with Israel with the establishment of a UN controlled buffer zone to man the border area pending a political settlement within the framework of the Geneva Middle East peace talks.

Angry outbursts during funeral KIRYAT SHMONA MOURNS 16 TERRORIST VICTIMS

Jerusalem Post Staff
KIRYAT SHMONA. — About 10,000 persons on Friday attended an emotional State funeral for the 16 civilian victims of the Arab terrorist attack on this border town. Minister of Police Shlomo Hillel told the townspeople who congregated near the local cemetery: "I want to address the terrorists and say that our hand will reach them wherever they are. We will not lay down our swords until everyone is brought to justice."

"And you, the Government of Lebanon, your blood will be on your head if you don't clean out the nest of terrorists on your soil... Beware, we have warned you."

Mr. Hillel was repeatedly drowned out by catcalls from the mourners, angry over what they charged was the lack of security and hospital facilities.

"Where were the police yesterday?" many cried. "We want security."

Chief Military Chaplain Aluf Mordechai Piron was forced to speed up his El Malei Rahaman prayer for the dead, as the crowd chanted "revenge" and "We want the death penalty."

Rabbi Piron called the Arab attack "insane bestiality" and said that "just as in the Yom Kippur War, the Arab armies could not defeat us... So we swear these gangs will not frighten us, demoralize us, uproot us or destroy us... They make war on Yom Kippur and murder on Pesach."

Both Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren and Ovadia Yosef attended the funeral, which took place near the common grave of Yosef Trumpeldor and his seven comrades.

Rabbi Goren told mourners to stand fast, to dig in. "But how can we stay here?" a woman shouted. "Every night my husband wakes me and we go to the shelters. What kind of a life is this?"

Women sobbed and screamed and many gave the shrill Arabic undulating cries reserved both for occasions of sorrow and joy. Most of Kiryat Shmona's population of 18,000 immigrated from North Africa.

At one point a man grabbed the microphone and shouted: "Any Arab who comes into Kiryat Shmona had better watch out!"

Several hundred mourners broke through a security cordon when a policeman guarding the area was overcome by emotion and stood by helplessly, tears streaming down his face. Two policemen were slightly injured in scuffles with the crowd.

Residents also branded the town's open air market, operated by Druse Arabs, as a "terrorist nest" and demanded its removal.

Mr. Hillel told them "that's exactly what the terrorists would like, to keep Jews and Arabs apart."

He promised, however, to relay the town's complaints to the Government at the next meeting of the Cabinet.

As the funeral rites ended, the families of the victims fell on the graves and would not move from there.

Unruly mourners later gathered outside the Town Hall to hurl insults at border police on guard there. Crowds had stoned the building the night before, breaking a number of windows.

Before the funeral, Likud leader Menahem Begin arrived in town and went straight to the Local Council, where Chairman Avraham Aloni was meeting with the Histadrut delegation. Mr. Begin was greeted by shouts from among the angry crowd: "Begin to the Government" and "Kiryat Shmona is given a raw deal."

Some people burst into the meeting room, and Mr. Begin tried to calm them. "This is not the hour for airing complaints," he said.

Chairman Aloni urged the Government to set up a special committee concerned with Kiryat Shmona's problems and to charge a minister to carry out urgent measures: "Only in this manner can we prevent a collapse in the town," he said.

Mr. Aloni demanded steps to ensure full and more suitable employment, more shelters in private homes, and more stringent measures to protect the town against terrorist attacks.

Even before the funeral, expressions of sympathy and offers of financial help from the entire country began reaching Kiryat Shmona.

Haifa Mayor Yosef Almog sent a message to Mr. Aloni, indicating that the Haifa Municipality Council had decided to adopt Kiryat Shmona. The Tel Aviv and Rosh Haayin municipalities also offered their help.

Police try to comfort a bereaved father at Friday's funeral.

In a personal offer, Jerusalem hotel owner Haim Schiff promised to contribute IL10,000 to the victim families. In a telegram to Mr. Aloni, he expressed the hope that other individuals would act similarly.

The Amidar company spokesman said the Government housing corporation had allocated IL20,000 to buy basic equipment for the survivors. The company has also given priority to the construction of more security rooms in the town, in addition to those already in existence.

The Finance Ministry's Property Tax Division announced that residents whose flats were damaged by the attack would either have them repaired or receive alternate housing. This would be covered by the War Damage Property Compensation Fund.

Arye Dulzin, acting chairman of the Jewish Agency Executive, said Friday that a committee will meet soon with the local council, to discuss ways of helping the town.

Solel Boneh's building division at Kiryat Shmona began repairs on Friday of the damaged building. Solel Boneh spokesman Aharon Gefen announced that the work had received top priority, and will not be stopped until completed.

School groups organized sympathy demonstrations in two places on Friday. In Jerusalem, a rally in front of the Knesset was called by the pupils' council. A demonstration in Netanya's Independence Square was organized by the secondary school teachers and students.

Among the expressions of outrage over the incident made public on Friday, was that of Archbishop Joseph Raya, head of the Greek Catholic Church in Israel. He condemned "the unthinkable, inhuman and savage massacre. He sent telegrams to Premier Golda Meir decrying the "inhuman and cruel attack," and to chairman Aloni, expressing his and his community's condolences to the families and their sympathy to the residents of the townships.

Bernard Katsen, chairman of the American section of the International Association of Jewish Lawyers and Jurists, attending the association's executive committee meeting here, said that "the guilt of the horrible massacre of innocent men, women and children... is a violation of... the Geneva Convention and of basic humanitarian... he said at the doors of government who harbour, condone and/or aid and abet the terrorists and guerrillas who engage in these murderous activities."

Likud to demand full inquiry on security in North

Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Likud sources last night said they will demand an inquiry commission into the Army's handling of the security arrangements at Kiryat Shmona. The sources said they would not be satisfied with the appointment of an investigating officer but want a full-fledged committee. They claimed that although security forces had prior information of terrorist plans for actions in the north during the Pessah holiday, no special precautions were taken.

The Likud plans to press their demand at today's meeting of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee, and when the issue comes to the Knesset plenum this week, either tomorrow or on Wednesday.

on the personalities involved in the government crisis but he is known to admire Defence Minister Dayan and to regard him as flexible. Toasting Dayan at a dinner here last month, the Secretary expressed his gratification that Dayan would be remaining in the Government.

There was little immediate editorial reaction to the Government's resignation, with no comment yet by the influential "New York Times" or "Washington Post." The "Christian Science Monitor" said it joined Israel's friends in regretting that Mrs. Meir's long political career had come to an end with her resignation under pressure, but commented that her departure was part of a painful but necessary, and we think, constructive process, of rethinking going on in Israel. Several national Jewish groups, in commenting on Mrs. Meir's stepping down, expressed similar admiration and appreciation of her dedicated work and sorrow at the way her career has ended.

It is not thought here that the Arab terrorist attack on Kiryat Shmona or the Israeli retaliatory action into Lebanon would seriously endanger the disengagement efforts, but they obviously further depress the diplomatic atmosphere. The State Department has not commented on the Israeli retaliation, but earlier condemned the Kiryat Shmona massacre as a "brutal and senseless slaughter of innocent civilians."

In a reflection of Dr. Kissinger's desire to keep the diplomatic momentum alive, the statement that the attack "underlines even more the urgent need for the Secretary's continued efforts to assist in bringing peace to this region."

O/C NORTHERN COMMAND: 'No absolute security against terror attacks'

The army will do all it can to take the initiative out of the terrorists' hands and make it difficult for them to operate — but it cannot guarantee safeguards against their attacks throughout the country, Aluf Mordechai Gur, O/C Northern Command, said on Friday.

"Both active and passive steps are being taken to ensure such murders as those in Kiryat Shmona would not recur," Aluf Gur said in an Army Radio interview. However, he pointed out, it should be borne in mind that many sabotage acts have taken place in central Israel recently, rather than near the border.

The army has promised the residents of Kiryat Shmona to post more men in and around the town and to see that more apartment shelters are constructed, he added. It is difficult to say anything to people whose dead lie before them, he said, but "the struggle in which we are engaged began long before Kiryat Shmona, it is continuing, and it possibly will go on for much longer. And the people of Kiryat Shmona are not only an integral part of it, they form one of the strongholds of our defence."

The situation on the Syrian front, Aluf Gur explained, is an interesting stage, since the Syrians continue to fire as negotiations have begun. This was a matter of policy, he said, because they believe this would "ripen" Israel for greater concessions. At the same time, Aluf Gur emphasized, the Syrians are interested in a large-scale war and from time to time "we observed signs indicating this may happen." Israel's basic evaluation is that the Syrians feel they stand little chance of getting what they want without a large-scale war.

Eban: No reason to delay talks with Syria

TEL AVIV. — The Kiryat Shmona massacre should not delay the progress of negotiations with Syria. This hope was expressed by Foreign Minister Abba Eban in an interview broadcast Friday night over Army Radio.

"We must oppose any tendency to make our schedule subservient to the wishes of the terrorists," he said, adding that the caretaker government was not only qualified to conduct negotiations with Dr. Kissinger, it was also obliged to do so.

Mr. Eban said that Israeli diplomatic missions throughout the world had been instructed that the government had full authority in all matters. Although any agreement would have to be approved by Knesset majority, most members were in favour of a settlement, he thought.

Mr. Eban favoured the formation of a government from the present Knesset. He was of the opinion that new elections would not change much.

chief of the Police Central district, Nitza Misha Ezra

Goldberg, and the head of the sub-district's investigations division, Rav Palm Menahe Golan, arrived at the scene shortly after the explosion and launched a search for the third man.

He was picked up in a Gaza-bound taxi at 8 a.m. Friday by a policeman at a roadblock on the coastal road near Ayanot.

The man, who had clumsily handled his wounds, was also taken to the Assaf Harofe hospital for treatment.

The police have imposed a blackout on the investigation. It was learned from reliable sources, however, that the trio intended to plant the bomb in one of the central cities of Israel. But the explosive device apparently went off accidently. Parts of the explosive device were found inside the burnt-out car.

Security forces searching the Gaza home of the car's owner discovered a number of home-made bombs and parts of other explosive devices.
More arrests are expected.

Hod optimistic on Israel's arms request

B-G. AIRPORT. — The members of the U.S. Congress Armed Services Committee believe that Israel must be kept strong by providing her with necessary armaments.
Mordchai Hod, assistant to the Defense Minister said here last Thursday on returning from the U.S.

The former O/C Air Force, who went there with Defence Minister Moshe Dayan three weeks ago, remained in Washington for discussions on requests for arms purchase. "We have asked for a great deal, and have reason to believe we will be supplied with what we requested," Mr. Hod said.

The Congressmen with whom he met, Mr. Hod reported, felt Israel should be equipped from existing U.S. inventory, and not have to wait for future weapon productions.

Low scoring marks 'end of season' mood National League leaders draw

By PAUL KOHN
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Netanya Maccabi and Tel Aviv Maccabi, first and second in the National League, yesterday drew 0:0 before a capacity 22,000 crowd at the Bloomfield Stadium, leaving the Netanya side top of the table two clear points above
the Tel Avivians.

Kfar Saba Hapoel, 2:1 winners over Jerusalem Hapoel, narrowed the gap and are now only one point behind Tel Aviv Maccabi. Five clubs are poised on the 24-points mark, as the football season enters its last third.

Games already had an end-of-season mood about them yesterday, four ending in goalless draws. Only 12 goals were scored.

The big match of the day between the two leaders proved disappointing. The absence of Victor Saroussi from the Netanya attack took much of the punch from that forward line. Oded Machness led the attack but found Tel Aviv goalkeeper Michael Kadach too effective.

Dror Barnur returned to spearhead the Tel Aviv Maccabi attack, together with Vicky Peretz, but they found the Netanya defence of Shuga Topolansky, Haim Bar and Gad Machness too tight. In the 64th minute, Peretz could have scored when, alone opposite Netanya goalkeeper Sheinfeld, but shot straight at the keeper.

In Kfar Saba, 18-year-old Yaacov
Ginsburg played only in the last 20 minutes of the game, but his appearance made all the difference to Kfar Saba Hapoel. The home side took the lead in the 42nd minute through Meir Hanegbi, but in the 68th minute Arie Barashi levelled for Jerusalem Hapoel.
In a solo breakaway, ten minutes before the end, Ginsburg hammered home the winning goal from a pass by Hanegbi.

Another player who played only in the last 20 minutes and who gave his side victory was veteran Shmuel Cohen of Tel Aviv Betar.
In this game, at the Bloomfield Stadium, Tel Aviv Betar were on top throughout, against a Petah Tikva Maccabi which, with the absence of Ze'ev Selzer because of injury, lacked a midfield general. But all Betar's pressure failed to produce goals until the 79th minute, when Cohen lifted an accurate pass to Eliezer Zweig, who headed past Shlomo Keel. Cohen clinched the result beyond all doubt with a goal four minutes before the end.

Haifa Hapoel parted company with Tel Aviv's Bnei Yehuda 0:0, in a game which they should have won comfortably but which nearly did not get beyond the 35th minute.
Referee Yosef Finkelstein stopped the game for 10 minutes, and then sent off Bnei Yehuda's Efraim Pi-tel for using foul language to a linesman. Bnei Yehuda players vigorously protested to the referee.
After play was resumed, Haifa Hapoel did all except score. Their forwards, Gabi Baliti, Benny Alon and Yitzhak Engelder all hit the post.

Four thousand at YMCA Stadium in the capital saw Jerusalem Betar play Ramat Gan Hakohav for the second time within four days. Ha-kiah this time changed their tactics, concentrating on defence. Jerusalem Betar badly missed Uri Mamillian through injury. Although they did all the attacking they lacked a sharpshooter. Yosef So-rinov has now gone eight league games in the Betar goal without conceding a goal.

Biggest win of the day was scored by Petah Tikva Hapoel, 3:1 over Hadera Hapoel. The goals came from Boris Normann after six minutes, Gady Zelniker in the 64th

2 remanded after brawl with police

AVIV. — Two men were remained for six days by the Magistrate Court here on Friday and others released on bail, following a fight in a Givatayim cafe Wednesday night between seven men and three plainclothes policemen.

The fight began, according to the representative, when one of the men remanded, Yaacov Da-as, was asked by one of the policemen what he wanted, and reacted by punching him in the face. Da-as' group of friends then allegedly came to his aid, and when the policemen tried to leave the reinforcements, he was up by Daas.

One of the policemen, a member of the Border Police, was armed with a sub-machinegun, but his friends overpowered him, took the weapon. The fight was found abandoned at the en-

The Holy Saturday services yesterday were held mainly at the Holy Sepulchre, which marks the site of the crucifixion and the resurrection. Petrosian defeated in world chess tournament

By ELIHAN SHAHAF
Jerusalem Post Chess Correspondent

Soviet grandmaster Viktor Korchnoi on Friday defeated former world champion Tigran Petrosian in the first game of the world chess championship semi-final preliminaries held in Odessa.

The earliest victory scored in the quarter-finals was by Boris Spassky over Robert Byrne in the third game of their San Juan, Puerto Rico match.

Korchnoi and Petrosian, who was favoured by most experts to win the match, played a complicated variation of the English opening. Petrosian, playing black, went into a passive defence and ran into time trouble, which proved to be fatal.

In the second semi-final match, former world champion Boris Spassky promoted his bid for a comeback shot at the world's chess championship on Friday night, with a strong opening game against Anatoly Karpov in Leningrad. The game was adjourned after 41 moves, leaving Spassky in a winning position.

Spassky's play seemed to confirm that he had regained his confidence which was badly shaken when he lost the world title to Bobby Fischer two years ago.

Under the rules, the first player to score four victories wins. If after 20 games neither player has been able to beat his opponent four times, the player with the lead wins. If both players are tied, a coin toss decides the winner.

World champion Bobby Fischer, who has not played a single tournament game since winning the title, is expected to play in the forthcoming Nice Olympics in June — if his demands are satisfied. These include a request for a special room in a different building from the rest of the competitors and a special honorarium for his participation in the U.S. team.

The organizers of the Olympics said Fischer's demands "appear in contradiction with the Olympic spirit."

cluding that the army encouraged

Men's tennis semi-finals today

By JACK LEON
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — South African Robert Millington yesterday celebrated his 21st birthday by becoming the first player through to the men's singles tennis championships here. He was later joined by Larry Parker, of the U.S., with both men winning $200 from the $2,500 in prize money at stake in the tournament.

The tournament, which resumed on Friday after a hold-up of more than three days because of rain, will now end on Tuesday, instead of yesterday as scheduled.

This afternoon at 1 p.m., Millington and Parker will be first on court at the Tel Aviv Maccabi Club, when they meet for a place in the final. After this, there will be quarter-finals between No. 1 seed Robert Rheinberger, of Australia, and New Zealand's Peter Langford, and between Israeli champion Yehoshua Shalem — the second seed — and his compatriot Felix Kaplan.

The women's finalists are New Zealand No. 2 Judy Connor and Norma Eastburn, of Australia. In yesterday's semi-finals, Miss Connor was taken to 4-6, 6-4, 6-2 by Dianne Eastburn (Norma's younger sister) in a scintillating match between the two hard-hitting Australasians. Norma cruised home 6-1, 6-1 against local girl Hagit Tzabari.

Felix Kaplan, the 27-year-old former tennis champion of Lithuania who settled here a year ago, was Israel's hero yesterday, reaching the last eight with an impressive 6-3, 6-2 victory over Western Australian No. 1 Robert Casey, a member of his country's Davis Cup squad last year. Shalem scored a workmanlike 7-5, 6-1 win against his Davis Cup team-mate Reuven Porges in his third-round match.

Highlight of the men's singles yesterday was Parker's 6-1, 2-6, 6-2 quarter-finals triumph over his compatriot Peter Fishbach in an intriguing out-and-thrust contest, with both Americans pleasing the gallery by the fluency of their ground strokes. In the second quarter, Millington defeated West German Jorg Bach 7-6, 6-4 in a hard-fought match.

The Eastburn family trio had something of a lean weekend on the courts, with the male member of the group, John, losing 3-6, 6-2, 6-3 to Langford. Israel's "outgoing" junior champion Yair Wertheimer was beaten 6-4, 6-4 by Parker at the same stage, while Porges defeated Rainer Koch, of West Germany 6-2, 6-2.

Israel Lawn Tennis Association chairman Avram Feiger told The Jerusalem Post last night that the invitation tournament planned for Jerusalem at the end of this week has been cancelled because of the extension of the Passover championships. The tournament scheduled to start today in Haifa will now get under way on Thursday and continue until Saturday.

Arms shipments since the war U.S. BATTLE ON AID TO ISRAEL

NEW YORK (JTA). — The "New York Times" reports from Washington that the Federal Office of Management and Budget and the State Department are locked in a bureaucratic battle over how much Israel should pay for the weapons it has been getting since the Yom Kippur War.

When Congress voted a $2.2 billion aid programme last December it specified that Israel should pay back $700m. and that the President should decide how much of the remaining $1.5 billion should be in credit and how much as a gift. There were indications that Congress expected all or most of the $1.5 billion to be a grant to Israel.

However, the Office of Management is reported to be arguing that Israel should pay for all of the aid where the State Department contends that most of the discretionary $1.5 billion should be "free." The newspaper said that several Senators pressed Kissinger on the issue on April 10, when he appeared in closed session before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and that his answers were reported to be evasive. At one point Kissinger said nothing could be done until it was clear who would be in the new Israeli Government.

The same sources also said that at another point Kissinger dodged the question by saying he was trying to get the best possible disengagement pact between Israel and Syria and that he needed a free hand. Another source said Kissinger had privately assured a Senator after the session that the decision, to be made soon, "would work out well for Israel."

Israeli diplomats were quoted as saying they were puzzled by the delay, and Israeli sources said Kissinger told them "It is out of my hands—it is on the President's desk."

The "New York Times" said that two months ago, when Israel Foreign Minister Abba Eban was in Washington, Kissinger said the decision would be made in a week. When Eban came to Washington two weeks ago, Kissinger promised an answer in a few days.

Sources close to Kissinger told the newspaper that the delay had nothing to do with the U.S. trying to get leverage over Israel in current Israeli-Syrian negotiations, and that the matter was before Nixon, who had to choose between the policy arguments of the State Department and the money arguments of the Office of Management.

The Kissinger sources said the Secretary of State had promised Israel that the decision would be made soon and that most of the $1.5 billion would be in the form of a grant.

The sources said the position of the Budget Office was minority view, but another source said this nevertheless meant that Israel would have to pay more than it had expected. The sources said the decision would be announced in the next few weeks as part of the regular Administration budget presentation for foreign aid for fiscal 1975, which starts next July.

Israel meanwhile has received arms shipments of about $1.5 billion and is continuing to place more orders. No new funds have been budgeted by the Administration to finance the new orders.

THROAT CUT OVER CHASTITY BELT

CAIRO (Reuters). — A homecoming husband, whom it did not name, was in jail awaiting trial for murder. Before going to Libya and Kuwait on business, it said, he flogged his wife to the ground and fitted the chastity belt, telling her: "Now I can go about my business in peace."

The weekly "Akhar al-Yom" said the husband, whom it did not name, was in jail awaiting trial for murder. Before going to Libya and Kuwait on business, it said, he flogged his wife to the ground and fitted the chastity belt, telling her: "Now I can go about my business in peace."

Rightists in Britain attack amnesty for the 'illegals'

LONDON (AP). — Right-wing organizations charged yesterday that the Labour Government's amnesty for illegal immigrants, most of them Asians, will trigger an invasion by thousands of their dependants into Britain.

Conservative Party politicians and rightist groups bitterly condemned the amnesty, announced in Parliament on Thursday by Home Secretary Roy Jenkins.

The National Front, an ultra-rightist organization that has long campaigned to halt immigration, branded the move "an appalling betrayal of the British people." The Monday Club, an influential pressure group of Conservatives, said in a statement that the ruling "is making retrospectively legal what was a crime... Many of those who are guilty of illegal acts will now be afforded the vote and will be eligible for benefit from the welfare services to which they have contributed nothing."

The decision looked certain to spark a big political storm. Conservative lawmakers attacked it in Parliament on Thursday and were reported to be pressing for a vote of censure on the ruling when the House of Commons reconvenes after the Easter recess.

The amnesty overturned the tight controls imposed in the 1971 Immigration Act by the Conservatives when they were in power. This limits the annual intake to 3,500 family heads plus dependants.

The amnesty applies to Commonwealth and Pakistani citizens who illegally entered Britain between March 9, 1968, and January 1, 1973, and managed to avoid detection for six months or more. Those who sneaked in after January 1 last year can still be deported if caught.

The conservative "Daily Telegraph" quoted police as saying more than 10,000 illegal immigrants and possibly 30,000 dependants will now be entitled to live here. The Conservatives estimated the dependants would total 20,000. Rightist organizations said this would mean a swarm of Asians flooding into Britain.

However, immigrant groups believed that fewer than 3,500 men who were smuggled into Britain

ARAB OFFICE IN U.S. ATTACKED

SAN FRANCISCO. — Five masked men ransacked the Arab Information Centre here on Friday and threatened its director. An anonymous caller said the attack was in retaliation for the massacre at Kiyat Shmona.

A male caller using the "Never Again" slogan of the Jewish Defence League claimed responsibility for the midday raid in a telephone call to the Associated Press.

The director of the centre said one of the raiders told him: "If you so much as open your mouth I'll blow your head off." He said he saw no guns. Neither he nor his secretary was injured.

In New York, leaders of major Jewish organisations denounced the Kiyat Shmona massacre and accused the Arab governments of aiding and abetting the terrorists, as they had others in the past.

Rabbi Israel Miller, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organisations, called the attack a "butchery" which was a horrifying reminder of what the Palestine Liberation Movement stands for.

The "New York Times" said in an editorial yesterday that "in the bitter moment of burying their dead it is too much to ask the Israelis to put aside thought of retaliation this time against the Lebanese from whose soil the murderers are believed to have come. Yet aside from emotional release, can acts of retaliation do other than raise in turn the passions of the other side?"

To break the blind and fearful cycle of terror here, as in Northern Ireland, will take a quality of leadership rarely seen among nations. There is small comfort in this season of hope, in the thought that "rarely" is not the same as "never." (AP, JTA, UPI)

Mother's letter was 'lies'

MOSCOW (Reuters). — Galina Panov, wife of Russian Jewish ballet dancer Valery Panov, charged yesterday that a "deeply immoral and cynical" campaign was being waged officially here against her and her husband. She made a statement available to Western newsmen.

Mrs. Panov, 23, herself once a rising star in Leningrad's Kirov ballet, said a recent letter signed by her mother and given wide official publicity here contained "a mountain of lies" about her husband aimed at discrediting him. It charged that Panov hoped to live off her daughter's talent in the West.

Panov, 33, formerly a leading dancer at the Kirov, has been barred from his profession since he and his wife applied to emigrate to Israel two years ago.

In New York, the National Conference on Soviet Jewry reported that Galina Panov has told friends she is pregnant.

Czech professor loses citizenship

PRAGUE (AP). — Eduard Goldstuecker, exiled former president of Prague University, has been stripped of his Czechoslovak citizenship, the official press agency CTK announced on Friday.

Goldstuecker, 61, left Czechoslovakia in August, 1968, when the Soviet-led invasion crushed the liberal Communist regime of Alexander Dubcek. An outspoken supporter of the "Prague Spring" reforms, Goldstuecker is a guest professor at the University of Sussex.

Strike in Soviet camps

MOSCOW (Reuters). — Several dozen political prisoners in two Ural labour camps are staging a protest hunger strike in support of dissident Vladimir Bukovsky, dissident sources said here yesterday.

The sources said news of the prisoners' protest had come from people living in the Perm region, where the two camps are situated. The sources could not say when the strike had begun or when it was planned to end.

The prisoners are demanding the Istanbul protest against Greece

ISTANBUL (Reuters). — About 10,000 people yesterday attended "warning to Greece" demonstrations here protesting over alleged Greek provocations against Turkey.

The rally, organised by the National Union of Students, passed peacefully and police said there were no incidents.

The demonstration came as the sands of Greeks flocked into Istanbul to attend Easter services at the Patriarchal Church of St. George — seat of the Greek Orthodox Church.

Apart from election rallies, it was the first political demonstration of any kind in Turkey since the military intervention of March, 1971.

Students carried anti-Greek banners and a succession of speakers complained about the treatment of the Turkish minorities in Greece and Cyprus and the presence of Patriarchate in Istanbul.

The main protest was over oil exploration rights in the Aegean Sea. Relations between Greece and Turkey have been strained in recent years by a dispute over prospect rights on the Aegean coastline.

Transport strike in Japan end

TOKYO (Reuters). — Trains started running in Japan yesterday as the country's two transport strikes ended with agreement between the unions and the government.

Men on the state-run national railways returned to work last night after an 88-hour walk-out, and air services resumed in Tokyo and on other cities shortly afterwards. Officials said it would be several days before schedules were back to normal.

Under the accord reached with two railway unions, the government agreed to try to solve by late next year the long-standing problem of the right of public workers' strike.

Pope Paul rests for Mass today

VATICAN CITY (Reuters). — Pope Paul rested yesterday in preparation for his heavy Easter Sunday schedule today, the most solemn in the Christian year, when he celebrates Mass at St. Peter's, a gives his Easter message of peace to mankind.

Vatican officials predicted that more than 200,000 pilgrims, many from abroad, will throng St. Peter's Square and surrounding streets to hear the Pope give his message from his high balcony in front of the basilica.

The message by the spiritual leader of 600 million Roman Catholics will also be televised and broadcast live to many parts of the world. The frail 76-year-old Pontiff, who recently suffered a bout of influenza, decided not to take part in the traditional late-night Mass at St. Peter's Basilica yesterday.

Pope Paul, however, took part in the ceremony of the Via Crucis, way of the cross, on Friday night commemorating the agony and crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

Nixon going ahead with Soviet visit

WASHINGTON (Reuters). — President Nixon and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev have agreed that failure to reach a new arms limitation accord must not interrupt détente or the planned Soviet-American summit in Moscow in June.

Their determination to press ahead with improving relations was reported by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger after the President and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko had conferred at the White House on Friday.

The two-hour meeting covered obstacles blocking a new accord at the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) in Geneva, differences of approach towards a Middle East settlement, and bilateral relations.

Although some of the lustre has faded from the high hopes that marked their first summit in 1972, the President and Mr. Brezhnev decided that their planned new round of talks would be held so as to maintain the momentum of détente.

For the first time, Dr. Kissinger openly acknowledged on Friday the Soviet Union and the U.S. would fail to draw up a new SALT agreement this year despite the confidence voiced by the President and Brezhnev when they met in U.S. last June.

But the Secretary of State stressed that progress had been made, and that in any event the planned summit would produce other substantial agreements — presumably in trade and trade relations — and other areas of arms control.

Dr. Kissinger said the likelihood of the summit talks on SALT negotiations was an "add-on" to the SALT-II accord signed in Moscow when it was signed in May 1972. These accords restricted defence nuclear weapons and placed ceilings on offensive missiles.

American shot in Argentina

CORDOBA, Argentina (Reuters). — U.S. information officer Alfred Laun, shot in the stomach by Argentine urban guerrillas, was yesterday reported to be "very weak" but expected to recover after an operation in this central industrial city.

Mr. Laun, 36-year-old director of the Cordoba office of the U.S. Information Service, was wounded when guerrillas of the Peoples Revolutionary Army (ERP) kidnapped him from his home on Friday. Just before midnight he was dumped on the left bank of the Primero River which flows through the city centre.

An anonymous telephone caller alerted local newsmen and police, who found Laun clad only in his underwear but wrapped in a blanket, with a blood plasma bottle attached to an arm.

Hunt for IRA leaders

BELFAST (UPI). — British troops stepped up patrols and traffic checks yesterday in an effort to capture Irish Republican Army (IRA) leaders who were expected to appear at the Easter weekend marches planned in Belfast and Londonderry.

IRA sympathisers planned mile-long marches Sunday — one in the Provisional wing and the other in the Official wing — along Belfast's Roman Catholic Falls Road to a town cemetery, burial place of members killed in action.

Sadat praises U.S., says he trusts Kissinger

CAIRO CRITICISM OF THE RUSSIANS

CAIRO. — Further criticism of the Soviet Union's attitude toward Egypt appeared in the Cairo press yesterday. The anti-Soviet comments emerged in an interview with President Sadat and in an article by Hassan Abdul-Kuddous, editor of the weekly "Al-Akhbar al-Yom" and a presidential confidant. The local press carried the full text of an interview given by Sadat to the West German magazine "Stern". Sadat was quoted as saying that the Soviets maintained their longstanding restrictions on arms supplies to Egypt during the October war. Sadat also said Algeria had to pay the Russians $100m. in hard currency during the war to get Moscow to agree to additional arms deliveries to Egypt. Sadat complimented the U.S. for its post-war even-handedness in the Arab-Israeli conflict and spoke in glowing terms about Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. "I trust that the U.S. will continue to be a friend of Egypt," Sadat said of Kissinger. "He has fulfilled every promise he made so far... He has qualities which I appreciate as a statesman." "I intend to use the new situation, for how is it before?" Sadat said. "Confrontation with America was not good for us. I have always said that before there can be easing of tensions with Israel we need easing of tensions with the U.S."

Sadat said in the interview that he does not expect Chancellor Willy Brandt to take the side in the conflict with Israel. "He cannot do this because of various reasons that concern the German past," Sadat said. "But I expect him to judge our problems fairly."

(Brandt will fly to Cairo on April 21 for a three-day official visit. The Chancellor's Middle East friendship trip begins in Algeria on April 19.)

Sadat said Brandt and the nations of Western Europe could play a "great role" in the solution of the Middle East conflict. "The Arabs have the oil and you have the technology. We are ready for this cooperation," said.

Sadat said Germans have a "special chance" to help Egypt's economic growth. "You were never a colonial power here like the English and French," he told "Stern". The English jailed me for two-and-a-half years during the Second World War because I conspired with the Germans against the common enemy."

Kuddous, in his article, accused the Soviet Union of making "political and economic moves in some Arab countries" which could undermine efforts for a Middle East peace settlement and jeopardize Egypt's relations with those countries.

He did not identify them, but he was believed to have in mind Syria and Iraq, which the Soviet Union has been cultivating lately following Moscow's greatly diminished influence in Egypt.

Kuddous said the U.S., in seeking to prove its good intentions toward Egypt, had offered a loan of $500m.

Talks on aid

There was no official confirmation of this, but American sources acknowledged that aid talks with Egypt are under way in various fields, including agriculture. They said the talks are "running parallel with the improvement in the political climate" between the two countries.

Kuddous also said that Egypt refused a Libyan offer of 1,000m. Egyptian pounds loan (about $110,000m.) when Libya tried to tie it to political conditions. He hoped "Libyan economic dealings would be raised from the level of bribery to the level of more constructive dealings."

Kuddous said the Libyan offer was made by Colonel Gaddafi in talks last year with President Sadat. Gaddafi suggested that Libya should participate with Egypt in establishing projects involving sugar, cement and lorries with the loan.

President Sadat proposed the loan should be cut in half until the projects proved successful, but Gaddafi insisted on his offer, Kuddous said.

Then, the following day, Libyan Premier Abdel-Salam Jalloud laid down new conditions for the agreement, dealing mainly with political organizations in the two countries, including formation of "popular committees" in Egypt.

Popular committees were formed in Libya as part of Gaddafi's "cultural revolution" last year. But the Egyptians refused to discuss Jalloud's proposals and the meeting was cancelled.

In an editorial in Friday's "Al-Ahram," editor Ali Amin said that after 26 years of suffering, Egypt has little patience with Arabs who criticize her.

Without naming any countries, Amin drew a sharp contrast between those Arabs who drove in their "Cadillac cars while Egyptians were crammed in buses; ate meat and turkey every day while it was only offered three days a week here; ate white while Egyptians ate black bread, and saw the Egyptian pound fall so far in value that one now buys only two American cigarettes where it once bought 20."

He said Egypt was not critical of other Arab countries "because they fought her battles with words instead of airplanes or guns." "Egypt has become the only country in the Middle East where you cannot buy sugar except by ration cards," he continued. "And shortages of newspaper forced Egyptian papers to limit their size to eight pages, while other Arabs filled far bigger newspapers with abuse and hold the Egyptians to ridicule and spread lies about them," Amin said.

Other Arab states know that Egypt sacrificed "scores of thousands of her soldiers and officers and lost scores of billions of pounds in the battles of Palestine which were taken from the people's food..."

"We are still ready to make the same sacrifices for five, 10 or 50 years until Israel evacuates every inch of the occupied Arab territory and until the Palestinian people recover their legitimate rights," he added.

Betting on the next election in Israel

LONDON (AP). — Ladbrokes, one of Britain's largest chains of betting shops, opened bets yesterday on the next Israeli election and made opposition leader Menachem Begin the favorite.

Ladbrokes gave these odds on the next Prime Minister: Begin even; former Chief of Staff and Ambassador to Washington Yitzhak Rabin — 2 to 1 against; Defence Minister Moshe Dayan — 6 to 1 against; Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir — 1 to 1 against; Foreign Minister Abba Eban — 10 to 1 against.

The odds means that a better puts up 1 pound to win 1 pound on Begin, but puts up 1 pound to win 10 pounds on Eban.

Ladbrokes quoted odds of 6 to 4 on Begin's Likud Party to win the next election. In this case a better would put up 6 pounds to win 4.

It made the odds 11 to 10 against the Alignment, meaning the better puts up 10 pounds to win 11.

STOLEN ANTIQUES FOUND IN BELGIUM

BRUSSELS (Reuters). — Brussels police have recovered antique porcelain worth at least 100 million Belgian francs (£1m.) stolen from the museum at Bailleur in northern France last week, police sources said yesterday.

The collection, which included 16th and 17th century porcelain from China and Japan, was found last night hidden in a garage in a Brussels suburb.

Nixon not guilty of tax fraud in California

SACRAMENTO California (AP). — California officials say they have not found any evidence of criminal negligence or fraud in President Nixon's failure to file state income tax returns for 1969-72.

The state announced Friday it is requiring Nixon to submit the returns now and pay $4,263.72 in back taxes, a penalty of $39.17 and $1,000 in interest on the taxes due.

The decision came in the wake of a Congressional report that claims Nixon owes about $485,000 in back federal taxes. The White House has said Nixon will pay the federal tax bill.

Dean Butler, Nixon's California tax lawyer, said the state bill would be paid, although he disagreed with some of the findings of the California franchise tax board.

At the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald Warren did not say whether Nixon would pay the California taxes or contest the state's findings. "We will wait until we hear from the state franchise tax board directly," Warren said.

The California decision was announced by Martin Huff, executive officer of the board which administers the state income tax. He said the President would promptly file returns and pay taxes owed for the four-year period.

The $39.17 penalty is for failing to file a return for 1970. Huff said the penalty was levied because it was obvious Nixon had enough California-based income to require a return.

But failure to file a return, in itself, does not constitute criminal negligence or fraud, he told a news conference. "There has to be evidence or indication of willfulness and all the evidence was the other way around," Huff said. Failure to file "is not necessarily a criminal matter if he didn't believe he had a requirement to file, and that was the situation."

Meanwhile the New York State tax department is studying the possibility Nixon owes back taxes in that state. The Department Director said one area under investigation is the $142,912 capital gain Nixon made on the sale of his Manhattan apartment in 1969.

'End of Israel's old guard'

CAIRO (AP). — The downfall of Golda Meir "as the last member of the old guard who built Israel" may mean the appearance of a new generation capable of dealing with the new facts indicated by the October war," the newspaper "Al Gomhouria" said on Friday.

The mass circulation "Al-Akhbar" predicted that neither Mrs. Meir's resignation nor even new elections "will be able to solve Israel's deep and acute political disorder."

In Moscow "Pravda" said the political crisis exploded because of "the mounting discontent of the rank-and-file Israelis with the Government's course, the country's hard economic position, the lack of peace, the obvious failure of the policy aimed at annexing the captured lands..."

Poor countries urged not to seek revenge

UNITED NATIONS. — Developing countries were urged on Friday to seek reconciliation rather than revenge. The appeals were made at the special U.N. General Assembly session on raw materials.

The Netherlands appealed to producing and consuming countries to work together, and then promised to increase its own aid to developing countries by 20 per cent.

"The developed countries must resist the temptation to let concern over the immediate effect of the energy crisis on our own economies prevail over our concern for world-wide development," said Dutch Foreign Minister Max van der Stoep.

Country after country, rich and poor, struck the theme of "solidarity on the fourth day of the session."

The Foreign Minister of the Ivory Coast, Arsene Assouan Usher, cautioned fellow developing countries against "yielding to the temptation of revenge." Such a "policy," he said, would be "economically disadvantageous and would not solve the real problems."

President Sadek Stevens of Sierra Leone and Foreign Minister Ahmed Tail Benhima of Morocco also called for cooperation between the have-not countries.

Cairo claim on Israel escape

CAIRO (AP). — The newspaper "Al-Akhbar al-Yom" claimed yesterday that Egyptian intelligence helped two Arabs escape last month from an Israeli prison where they were being held on charges of spying for Egypt.

The paper identified the two as Abdul Rahman Karman and Tawfik Fayed and said they held Israeli nationality.

Karman told the paper that he was serving 12 years in Ramleh prison and his friend eight years.

The paper said that for "security reasons" it would not disclose how Egyptian intelligence helped the men to escape. It also said it wanted to protect a number of persons who still live in Israel.

Vietcong HQ bombed

SAIGON (AP). — Waves of South Vietnamese planes pounded the Vietcong headquarters at Loc Ninh north of Saigon twice on Friday in retaliation for attacks that overran a government base, the Vietcong said yesterday.

South Vietnamese military sources confirmed the first series of more than 50 strikes against Loc Ninh on Friday morning within hours after the government's Tong Le Chan base was overrun. Saigon reported the fate of the base's 259 defenders remained unknown yesterday, but the Vietcong said they just walked in and found the camp deserted.

Saigon government sources said they had no reports on the second wave of air attacks charged by the Vietcong.

Tong Le Chan is 80 km. north of Saigon, and Loc Ninh is 43 km. farther north of the base.

A statement issued by Maj. Phuong Nam, chief spokesman for sources said.

the Vietcong delegation to the two-party Joint Military Commission in Saigon, said:

"Last night, waves of Vietnamese air force tactical bombers bombed for the second time the Loc Ninh general area. The bombs were dropped on Xom Bung, three kilometres south of Loc Ninh, and Loc Thai village and vicinity. Some of the bombs hit a school in Xom Bung."

The Vietcong said these were only initial reports and no figures of casualties were available.

The Vietcong said it was the sixth time air raids had been carried out against Loc Ninh since the cease-fire went into effect on January 28, 1973.

Saigon military sources said that in its Friday morning raids the targets were North Vietnamese and Vietcong troop concentrations, ammunition depots and the Loc Ninh airfield. The aircraft encountered moderate to heavy anti-aircraft fire, but they all returned safely, the sources said.

Oil firm profits up 70 p.c.

NEW-YORK (AP). — The worldwide profits of a representative group of 30 petroleum companies increased 70.9 per cent last year, a Chase Manhattan Bank study shows.

The bank's energy economics division said in a special report on oil company profits that, "when considered superficially, a 71 per cent increase in profits appears excessive."

However, the bank's economists cautioned that "an analysis that is limited solely to the change for a single year is not only foolish and grossly misleading but can also be dishonest."

For the past five years the group of 30 companies had an annual average earnings growth of only 12 per cent. For the past 10 years, the annual average growth has been 9.9 per cent, the study said.

Analysis showed that 85 per cent of the 1973 profit increase occurred outside the U.S., and that devaluation of the dollar was the single most influential factor in the general profit rise.

GAULLIST WIN IS EXPECTED

PARIS (AP). — An opinion poll indicated yesterday that Francois Mitterrand, the Socialist left alliance candidate, would poll the most votes in the first round of the French presidential election, but that most Frenchmen thought he could not win the run-off.

May 5, the two top candidates — into a run-off on May 19.

According to the poll, the first since President Georges Pompidou's death, Mitterrand would win 38 to 40 per cent of the votes May 5, depending on who his opponent was.

But the canvass reported that the Gaullist-oriented candidates, Jacques Chaban-Delmas or Valery Giscard d'Estaing, would beat Mitterrand in the second round on May 19.

The poll said that 43 per cent thought Giscard d'Estaing had a better chance to win a run-off than Mitterrand, who was given 40 per cent.

At Chaban-Delmas ran in the run-off, 45 per cent thought he would win and 27 per cent said Mitterrand was the likely winner. The question on the run-off did not ask who the voter would choose personally, but rather who he thought would be the probable victor.

The poll taken for the newspaper "France-Soir" on April 9, did not consider the candidacy of Jean Royer, the former Posts and Telecommunications Minister, who is expected — because of his popularity with small businessmen — to cut into the vote totals of all three major candidates.

On Friday Mitterrand said his government, if he is elected, would include Communists.

Mitterrand, 57, who is in his third presidential race, cited the precedent of Gen. Charles de Gaulle having brought Communists into the provisional government he formed after the liberation of Paris in 1944.

"Why should I deprive myself of them in a situation much less perilous for civil peace? Why should I deprive myself of the representatives of all the workers' forces?" Mitterrand asked a press conference at which he outlined his platform.

Mitterrand has the full support of France's strong Communist Party, and some small leftist groups, for the election.

A lot is left to the Security Council

U.N. DEFINES AGGRESSION

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — After quarter-century of stalling and compromise, the U.N. has produced a definition of aggression. It was announced today by a 35-nation special committee representing a cross section of U.N. membership and all the major powers except China.

The definition runs exactly 500 words plus footnotes, is highly flexible and fully subject to interpretation by the big power-dominated Security Council.

A key issue in defining aggression was resolved by declaring that the use of force in a conflict is "prima facie evidence" of aggression, but that the Security Council should find otherwise.

The U.S. and other Western countries had opposed declaring that the use of force was automatically aggression, because of questions of intent and provocation.

The definition must be approved by the General Assembly next fall. Diplomats predicted that this would be overwhelming.

"What we have," said Robert Rosenstock, a lawyer who headed the U.S. delegation, "is a definition that provides guidelines but leaves the discretion of the Security Council untouched."

British delegate Henry Steel said the definition is "valuable guidance to the Security Council — no less and no more."

Some points in the eight-article definition:

- Aggression is the use of armed force by a state against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of another state or in any other manner inconsistent with the U.N. charter.
- First use of armed force in contravention of the charter is prima facie evidence of aggression, but the Security Council may find otherwise.
- Acts of aggression listed include territorial invasion or attack, annexation, bombardment, blockade, attacks on a country's armed forces, illegitimate use of armed forces in another country, making a territory available for aggression against a third state, and dispatch of "armed bands, groups, irregulars or mercenaries" who carry out such acts — or "substantial involvement" in such activities.
- The Security Council may determine that other acts constitute aggression.
- Nothing in the definition precludes the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples forcibly deprived of that right, or of their right to struggle for their freedom.

...but the Security Council may find otherwise.

...armed bands, groups, irregulars or mercenaries" who carry out such acts — or "substantial involvement" in such activities.

...The Security Council may determine that other acts constitute aggression.

...Nothing in the definition precludes the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples forcibly deprived of that right, or of their right to struggle for their freedom.

GENEVA (Oha). — Research Programme (GARP). This project, called GATE, an acronym for GARP Atlantic Tropical Experiment, will have its headquarters at Dakar, Senegal, and will run for three months starting in mid-June.

It will involve 5,000 scientists with administrative personnel from 30 countries, using 36 ships, a dozen specially-equipped aircraft, and observation posts in 46 countries and on many small islands. There will be 100 scientists at Dakar headquarters, while some 1,500 will man the ships and aircraft. While Dakar is the approximate geographical centre of the wide tropical band under study, it will extend beyond the Atlantic, westwards across South and Central America into the Pacific, and eastwards across Africa into the Arabian Sea and the Indian Ocean.

Countries providing ships or aircraft for GATE include Brazil, Canada, Colombia, France, Mexico, the Netherlands, Portugal, the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States. Total costs have been estimated at around $50 million. Soviet and American space satellites will also contribute data, which will include sea temperatures, salinity in the upper levels of the ocean and observations of air temperature, relative humidity, pressure, wind direction and liquid water content.

Rainfall studies in other parts of the world in the past year show some sharp contrasts. In middle latitudes, especially in the British Isles, the period from July 1972 to March 1973 was the driest since 1949-50, and groundwater levels were not replenished during that winter, according to Professor Lamb. After some rather wetter periods last summer, the deficiency set in again in October, so that at the end of the year soil moisture was again deficient. Some areas in eastern Britain, e.g. near Edinburgh, had under 60 per cent of their expected rainfall both in 1972 and 1973. Water shortages for industry were also reported in Japan, where steel production was cut in August.

However, in California there were floods early in the year and, in some parts of the state, the 1972-73 winter was the wettest ever recorded. In the Middle West of the United States and the Great Lakes region, huge areas were flooded in April 1973, lake and river levels rising to their highest point since 1844 and, in some cases, since records began somewhat earlier.

Although for much of Europe including Scandinavia, the winter of 1972-73 was the third mildest in succession and a warm summer followed, especially in Scandinavia and Germany, there were some remarkable cold invasions in the autumn and early winter of 1973, and snow covered the ground briefly in central Finland as early as August 24.

In the southern hemisphere, "the patterns in 1973 seem to have been affected by anomalies rather similar to those in the northern hemisphere, but shifted somewhat poleward," says Professor Lamb. There were droughts on the fringes of the desert zone early in the year, but these gave way to floods later in central, northern and eastern Australia. Drought which had afflicted large areas of the continent in 1972 continued in the south with a heatwave and bushfires in Victoria.

CHINESE RESPECT HENRY KISSINGER AS CUNNING, DANGEROUS PERSUADER

By DENNIS BLOODWORTH

SINGAPORE (Oha). — No nation keeps a more canny eye on the U.S. Secretary of State than the Chinese, for while to others he may simply be a protagonist of American policy, a managerial negotiator or a meddling nuisance, for them he belongs to that cunning and dangerous species the "persuader."

The yu shuo, or "wandering persuader," first came into his own during a period of compulsive betrayal and butchery in which the dukes of seven great fiefs styled themselves independent "kings" and fought each other for the mastery of ancient China. A freelance strategist, skilled in argument and diplomatic finesse and able to weave the military and political threads of power into whole cloth, he was often an impoverished scholar or aristocratic refugee from one of the smaller fiefs that the bigger bullies had engulfed.

And as a minister-at-large, who not only guided the policies of his patron (or series of patrons) but toured the other states, talking them into agreement with their ruler, he was constantly on the road. His standing was high, and he was heard with respect and attention. (One silver-tongued beguiler, who had succeeded in cajoling his monarch into seeking an alliance with a neighbour, then turned around and argued precisely the opposite course, just to show he could present both sides — and succeeded again.)

While he might talk in lofty terms of principles, however, his ambition was to turn those principles into practice and power, and it was said of the most astute of his kind that he was superior to his ruler, and "if he says an angry word, all the princes tremble."

'Princes tremble'

Dr. Kissinger is an exile from his oriental homeland, a scholar who has advised U.S. Presidents of both political parties, and as he moves indefatigably from Washington to Peking to Cairo to Moscow to London, the analogy needs no labouring. If he says an angry word he can make "the princes tremble," if only with fury, and as for his relationship with his overlord, the question has already been asked: which can best spare the other, and the Americans best spare themselves — Kissinger or Nixon? The Secretary of State may talk in high-flown terms of an expansive U.S. foreign policy of the future, as open as the prairie, but his immediate concern is with power, and he exercises it through a secret, single-handed diplomacy that for the Chinese is typical of the art of the persuader.

In Peking the Secretary of State is identifiable as a familiar historical phenomenon.

Like a persuader of the dark millennium, Kissinger is a peripatetic verbal tactician with a nimble tongue and a quick ear, who decides privately what should be done, and then talks men into doing it, while seeming to present an objective case and to sympathise with their standpoint.

The Chinese savour the very furtiveness of his initial moves in any delicate undertaking. They find it comforting after listening to all the occasional loudmouths who call for "open agreements openly arrived at" so early that they can cause a sensitive hearer acute diplomatic agoraphobia. The Chinese agree with Kissinger that you should strike your bargain privately before engaging in any formal displays of open diplomacy.

FILM SHOT IN ISRAEL

East Germans shown slanted view of Israel

By LESLIE COLLYT

BERLIN (Oha). — EAST German television has given its viewers a rare Communist view of Israel, a country treated with official scorn in the German Democratic Republic.

The programme was filmed in Israel and shown here at prime viewing time. It is not, however, the first opportunity East Germans have had to see background reports on the Jewish State: West German TV's two networks, which are avidly followed in the GDR, have made many films on Israel and some of the most recent have been noteworthy for going beyond the official Israeli viewpoint on controversial issues such as the Israeli Arabs and the country's plans for Jerusalem.

'Aggressor state'

This East German vision of Israel began with a woman announcer saying: "Dr. Sabine Katina takes a look at internal conditions in the aggressor State." An interview sign flashed on the screen, indicating that this East German production was made for viewing in all other East European countries and the Soviet Union.

Opening shots show Arabs "driven off their land by Jewish soldiers." "Pillaging and expulsion have been the policy of Israel toward the Palestinian Arabs," a male voice says. In the background, Joan Baez, the American folk singer, can be heard singing, "Where Have all the Flowers Gone" as scenes of ruined Arab villages flash past.

The Israeli flag waves in the breeze as the German voice explains that "the Star of David was the badge of the persecuted Jews in Treblinka and Auschwitz. In the name of this Star of David flag, 358 Arab villages were destroyed."

Another film clip, showing Arab workers jumping from the rear of a truck, illustrates the "masses of Arabs who have been transported into Jewish cities. Being an Arab in Israel is the same as being a Negro in South Africa or a Jew in Hitler's Germany."

The scene then shifts to the garden suburb of an Israeli city with the remark that the "Israeli bourgeoisie has grown strong on the spoils of war." The tall building housing the Diamond Exchange in Tel Aviv and a snatch of an interview with its director come on the screen, followed by a car ride past more rows of private homes with American made cars parked outside. The camera switches to the "slums of Tel Aviv where mostly Oriental Jews live." The commentary says: "They talk of leading the roofs, rats, snakes and authorities not interested in them until they want their sons." "The poor have got poorer through the wars," the commentator notes. "Every tenth Israeli lives below the minimum existence level." The camera lingers on maimed beggars at the street corners of an Israeli city.

A German-speaking Israeli butcher, "Herr Freund," is shown working inside a supermarket, "where prices are such that most people can now only look at the products," the dialogue remarks. At home, the butcher says he has never had a holiday, nor can he afford meat or the schoolbooks of his three smiling children who are shown next to him. The family is then shown welcoming a number of young Israeli Arabs to their flat, with the German voice saying this is a high point of their week "when their friends come."

Other Jewish workers who want to help the Arabs in their midst are contrasted with Golda Meir, the Israeli Prime Minister, presiding at a banquet for "rich American Jews" who have raised money selling Israeli State bonds. An interview is shown with a prominent Israeli who heads the annual world-wide drives to gather money among Jews in the Diaspora. The commentary lets him appear almost as evil as Adolf Eichmann on trial in Jerusalem.

Meir Wilner

Much footage in the TV film is devoted to Meir Wilner, chairman of the New Communist Party (Rakah). He is shown in one meeting place addressing Arabs in Hebrew.

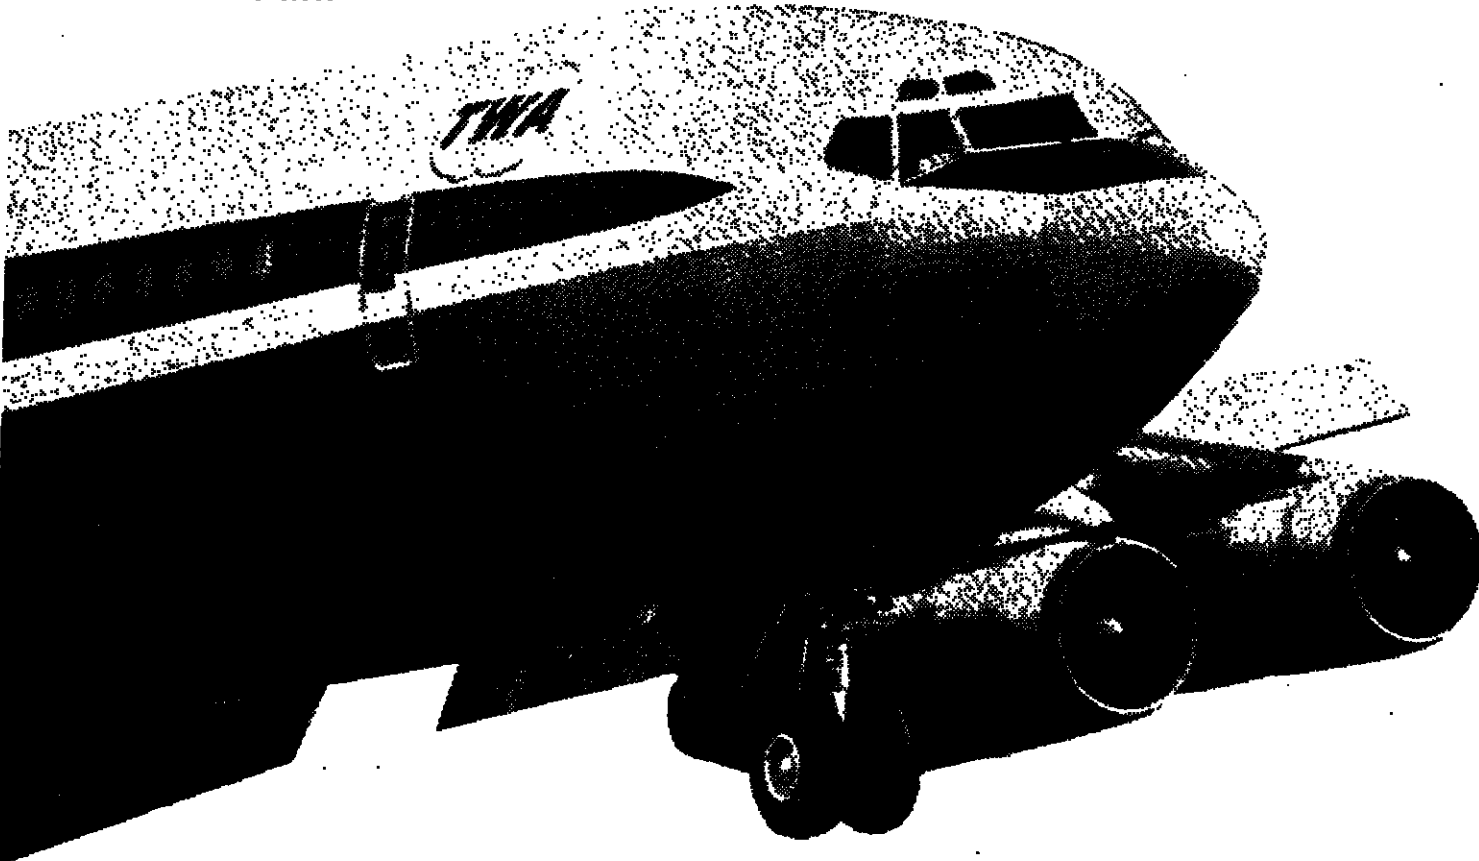

The closing sequences of the film are taken in a military cemetery where the camera dwells on long rows of fresh graves for Israeli soldiers. Joan Baez sings "Where have all the young men gone?" in the background. The documentary ends on an equally bitter note, in a village in Israeli-occupied territory.

Nowhere do the East Germans suggest any way out of this Arab-Jewish tragedy. They indicate that only a triumph of Communism in Israel will bring about any real solution.

LAW REPORT

Appointment of defence counsel is mandatory

Justice Barak.

Justice Barak noted that the appellant had originally been appointed to defend himself and to allow the appeal.

On the case to the District Court, a retrial after the court appointed a defence counsel appellant, as required by the Criminal Procedure Law.

After reading Justice Barak's opinion and studying the English precedent (R. v. 1964, 1 W.L.R. 576) he had his mind, he held, and decided with Justice Sussman's conclusions, with, however, reservations with regard to the appellant's reasoning.

Justice Barak then went on to say that the appellant had been well aware of his right to appoint a defence counsel, and that he had chosen to do so.

Japanese fishing threatens salmon off U.S. shores

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP). — Concern for the endangered Bristol Bay red salmon run has prompted a resolution in Alaska's State Senate urging Japan to give up its fishing rights in the Bering Sea.

But even if the Japanese concede, Department of Fisheries experts says it may be too late to save this dwindling resource.

In May and June, an estimated 5.5 million sockeye salmon will be schooling outside American territorial waters in preparation for their annual trek to the Bristol Bay spawning area. Before they reach their destination, about 700,000 of them will be taken at sea by Japanese fishermen.

Fisheries officials estimate that 9.5 million fish must manage their way through the seas and return to their natal streams in order to sustain the seriously depleted Bristol Bay run.

In an attempt to protect the remaining fish, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game has instituted an indefinite closure of all but two of the main fishing grounds to American fishermen. The closure means hundreds of vessels will be tied to the docks and thousands of Alaskans out of work.

By international agreement, Japanese fishermen are prohibited from harvesting salmon east of the 175th west longitude. No vessel of other than Canadian or American origin may display fishing gear east of the demarcation line in the Bering Sea or Gulf of Alaska.

Officials say the problem occurs when the salmon stray over the line, sometimes as much as 15 degrees beyond American protection. That leaves the immature and schooling fish vulnerable to any vessel in the area.

The size of the Japanese fleet has increased dramatically in the past 20 years. As many as 11 mother ships with 369 catcher boats will compete for this year's crop of salmon before the fish are able to return to American waters.

Between 1956 and 1972 more than 43 million fish, worth as much as $3m., were harvested by the Japanese.

The quest for a solution to the problem is difficult, deeply entangled in international agreements and multilateral negotiations. Decisions in the past have come largely from the International Pacific Fisheries Commission, an organization comprised of delegates from the U.S., Japan and Canada. But the commission will not meet again until next fall in Seattle.

Legislation has been introduced in the U.S. Senate by Senator Warren Magnuson of Washington, extending the U.S. contiguous fishing zone from the present 19 kms. to Japan and Canada. But the bill also would extend U.S. jurisdiction "to its undetermined fish (fish originating in U.S. coastal waters) wherever they may range in the oceans."

The bill may be capable of making protection possible in certain vulnerable areas, but it is intended as an interim measure and not a permanent solution, Magnuson says. The bill says it wouldn't abrogate any treaty or convention to which the U.S. is a party. In light of the many agreements concerning international fishing, that could negate the bill's impact.

Further complicating matters is the substantial amount of Japanese money behind the local industry. A large portion of the fish packing plants both in Alaska and the continental U.S. are partially owned by Japanese investors.

Swiss bank head resigns over 'sizeable loss'

ZURICH (AP). — Union Bank of Switzerland, the largest Swiss commercial bank, on Friday announced the resignation of its deputy director general in connection with a "sizeable loss" the bank had incurred because of "foreign exchange dealings by a client."

The terse communique said Robert Strehel, deputy director general and head of the bank's foreign exchange department, had offered to resign because of the case. "The resignation was accepted," it added.

The bank said the loss was "much more than covered by valuation reserves in foreign exchange and precious metals."

Zurich banking sources said the statement appeared to indicate that the bank had extended a substantial credit to the client financing unsuccessful speculation in foreign exchange.

They said that the communique's wording indicated the loss was likely to run into millions of francs.

Reduction in marine war rate in M.E.

JERUSALEM POST REPORTER TEL AVIV. — The war rate committee of the marine underwriters in London has decided to reduce the war marine rates on ships coming and leaving Israeli, Jordanian, Syrian, and Egyptian ports. The reduction is from 0.25 per cent to 0.175 per cent. This reduction went into effect last Thursday, April 11.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND cut its minimum lending rate last week by a quarter per cent to 12 per cent. It was the second such cut in the past two weeks. The reductions by the state-run bank reflect the policy decision by the new Labour Government to try to bring down lending rates generally.

LESSON OF ATTACK

THERE was a period when the assassination of princes and rulers was common practice for anarchists, and it was generally agreed that if the assassin was ready and willing to die in the course of the attack it was impossible to prevent. The prominent or threatened have bodyguards not because this can save their lives from an assassin bent on suicide as well as murder, but to make sure that he will not get away, and thereby to make the murder trade less attractive.

By the same lights no number of troops patrolling the outskirts of Kiryat Shmona can make the town wholly safe from terrorists. And what of all the other towns that would need equal protection?

Wednesday's events showed clearly that purely defensive action did not prevent the assassins' success on this occasion, and might not prevent it on another. The only thing that is reasonably sure is that the attackers will not be able to escape but will die together with their victims, unless they prefer to surrender at the last moment.

Ahmed Jibril, leader of the "General Command" of the Palestine Liberation Front who masterminded Thursday's slaughter, announced the result with pride, though he did not recite the ages and sex of most of the victims. He also announced that such action would continue, in order to prevent the possility of peace.

There is no means of dealing with such plans to murder us — for to murder at random in one place is the same as to murder in every other — except by counter-attack. If terrorist teams are indoctrinated and prepared in peaceful camps the other side of a wire fence they can be stopped a dozen times before they reach their target in Israel, but it is enough for one group to get by unseen to appear to undo the work of the months and years that went before. And indeed many infiltrators and terrorists have been stopped, caught or killed in the past by routine patrols and in regular ambushes at sensitive points on the border.

Zahal's move into the villages in southern Lebanon on Thursday evening was only a reminder that the Lebanese government can expect no peace if there is no peace on our side of the border. They have contrived to take action in the past, if reluctantly and slowly, and they will have to take action again. After so blatant an assault the reaction had to come fast. But unless there are indications that the border will be carefully sealed on the Lebanese side in future this cannot be the end of the affair.

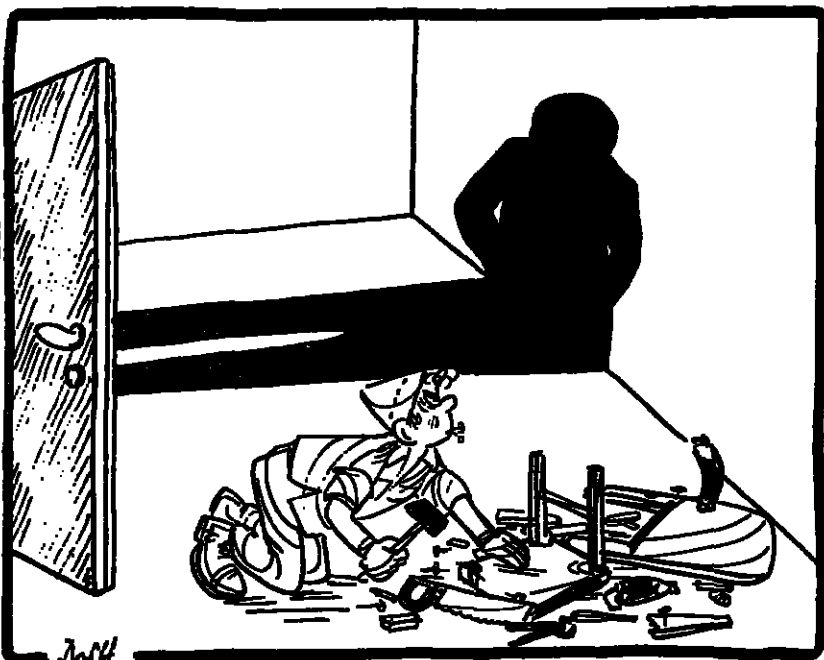

The October war surely showed the difference in effectiveness between attack and defence mobilised when an enemy attack has been set in motion, in Kiryat Shmona as on the Canal.

BACK FROM LEBANON

Tired and sober, these troops return from the raid against six villages in Southern Lebanon Friday night. The action was designed to move the Beirut authorities to prevent the terrorist movements from staging raids into Israel from Lebanese territory.

Mitterrand's bourgeois image puts him ahead

By JOSEPH KRAFT

PARIS. — I had a drink here in Paris the other day with Francois Mitterrand, the Socialist leader who, with the backing of the Communists, is running strong for President of France. The circumstances couldn't have been more casual — or more revealing of the political picture in this country.

Mr. Mitterrand comes on as almost a caricature of the solid, bourgeois professional man. He lives with his family near the Cathedral of Notre-Dame in an old private home which he is renovating.

His stock of drinks includes bourbon and Irish as well as the usual French digestifs. His small talk ran to questions about which of the two was called whisky in America.

When I asked for soda, he produced one of those siphon affairs which are supposed to convert plain water to fizzy water. Like the siphons of most people, Mr. Mitterrand's siphon didn't work. Like most men, he blamed the trouble on his wife. Then he needed her a little more, in a pleasant luxurious fashion, when it developed there were no cubes in the ice bucket.

His political conversation was above politics and personalities. He did let slip that he had run for President against Gen. de Gaulle in 1965 and emerged with 45 per cent of the vote.

But he felt it was too close to the death of President Pompidou to indulge in partisan polemics. The more so as he didn't know the exact terms of support he would have from the various parties backing his candidacy.

Behind that elaborately disarming approach lie almost all the main elements of the French political scene. In particular, it is possible to see why Mr. Mitterrand has at least a fair chance to become President of France.

Property helps

His solid, middle-class tone, for one thing, fits in perfectly with the mixture of prosperity and discontent which obtains here, as in most other Western countries. Because there is discontent — notably with high prices and unequal distribution of income — Mr. Mitterrand's social programmes exert broad appeal.

Because prosperity has become so ingrained, there is no great fear that a leftwing government would spoil everything. Especially if the government were led by a man of property such as Mr. Mitterrand.

His distinctly nonpartisan approach — and especially the hint that he was a worthy opponent of Gen. de Gaulle back in 1965 and, hence, a man of stature — contrasts advantageously with the infighting which has characterized the candidacies of leaders in the direct line of succession from Gen. de Gaulle.

Former Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas has now emerged as the candidate of the Gaullist Party. But not before a truly nasty campaign to head him off had been conducted by the Gaullist Prime Minister, Pierre Messmer, and some of his associates.

The divisions of the right and centre work to favour Mr. Mitterrand with his unified leftwing support and his own above-the-battle stance. One good poll by the conservative newspaper "L'Aurore" shows Mitterrand beating all other candidates in a head-to-head race.

No Communist tool

As to the matter of terms of party support for his programme, there lies the great unknown of the Mitterrand candidacy. The Communists, suspicious of his middle-class tastes and instincts, have tried to make him their prisoner by forcing agreement on a specific programme. Mitterrand has resisted any but the most vague commitments. Moreover, he has advertised his resistance — the better to demonstrate to middle-class voters that he is independent of the Communists.

Many signs now suggest the Communists are unhappy with Mitterrand. In the end they may decide to throw the election. But if they stay the course, Mitterrand has a fair chance of winning.

A Mitterrand victory, of course, would bring the Communists to national office in France for the first time in more than 25 years. That is bound to happen sooner or later. Mitterrand, at least, would keep them under tight rein and on the defensive.

Beautification of Jerusalem

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — The Municipality of Jerusalem has invested great efforts in beautifying Ruppin, Yirmiyahu and Ben-Zvi Boulevards, with flowers and greens, and it is a pleasure to drive or walk along them. But I wonder how long they will stay that way because of the indifference of the people for whom it was done. Everytime I drive through one of these boulevards, I see people crossing right through them. There are offenders of all kinds: students, government employees, etc., but the worst one was a teacher who walked a whole class of children right through the freshly planted bushes to reach the other side of the road. Granted it is a long walk to the next crossing, but the Municipality should have anticipated this and made some clearly marked paths across the roads to save a lot of walking and at the same time protect the greenery.

Jerusalem, March 24.

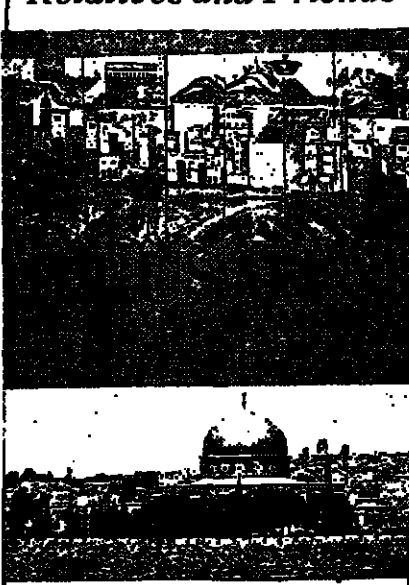

The Jerusalem Municipality replies: We are actually aware of the above problem. However to ensure the swift flow of traffic, the Ministry of Transport does not allow a pedestrian crossing in the middle of traffic islands. We expect the residents of the capital to display a measure of self-discipline with regard to gardens and other beautification projects. In any event, crossing at these points is against the law, the enforcement of which is the responsibility of the Israel Police.

Rahel Dayan explains

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I refer to your report of April 5 on my recent visit to London and the Reader's Letter that appeared on Friday. The facts are that I was in Paris two weeks ago to attend a charity function, which had been scheduled several months ago, and went from there to London for three days at my own expense, for a private visit during which I also visited a number of art galleries (this has been my interest for many years). A friend suggested that I also have a look at the masterful art copies of Elmye de Hory, and I spent about 20 minutes in his study during which time he asked for permission to make a sketch of myself.

De Hory then gave one of the London evening papers a totally distorted account of this visit, claiming that I had come especially to see him to have my portrait painted. Had the London paper bothered to check the facts, the story would never have appeared in de Hory's distorted version.

Kiryat Shmona massacre

Friday's press comments reflect the general feeling of horror and abhorrence over Thursday's brutal murders at Kiryat Shmona, and demand that a full measure of justice be meted out both to those responsible for the murders and those granting them asylum.

Davar (Histadrut): "The latest massacre exceeds in horror even the most despicable murderous operations boasted of to date by the Arab terrorist organizations and calls for an unequivocal and effective response. Even though since yesterday it has functioned in a caretaker capacity, the Israeli government has every capability and the fullest authority to draw the necessary conclusions both against Lebanon, from which the perpetrators set out, and against Syria, whose delegates today commence discussions in Washington with Dr. Kissinger."

Ha'aretz (non-party) asks whether only the brutal murder of innocent women and children can make us stop concentrating solely on our own problems. At this grave and difficult time Israel finds herself with a faulty leadership, and the process of forming a government and appointing a supreme commander for the I.D.F. must by all means be speeded up.

Al Hamishmar (Mapam) charges the Lebanese Government with the grave responsibility for the mass murder. "The Beirut authorities are well aware of the address of the assassins' dispatchers: their headquarters are located in the Lebanese capital, where their spokesmen and leaders openly boast of their criminal deeds."

Hamodia (Agudat Yisrael) blames those responsible for Israel's security. "It is not enough to blame the Lebanese Government, which is not responsible for the defence of Kiryat Shmona, especially since the political and military conception behind Israel's punitive raids against Lebanon has not proven effective. Why was no attention paid to the threats issued during the past few days by the heads of the P.L.O.? At any rate, we cannot put up with the fact that such gangs are allowed to operate under the nose of an organized, properly equipped army and a defence establishment that has few equals."

Omer (Histadrut) says that Israel must make it clear that the taking of hostages is a crime like any other murder. "Israel will on no account release terrorists being held for murder, even if other terrorists take hostages in an attempt at extortion."
